Straight to the point

- Reporting is good for the community
  - But the historical memories of a given society may have a huge influence
- Reporting is good for the individual???
  - See above
  - Think about the consequences: blame culture of the society; judgement of expert communities; media etc. and losing face
- Reporting is a personal value
- The base line of just culture lies among the professionals. It is embedded in their culture. To foster just culture we have to educate our colleagues starting from ab initio courses.

To err is human, to report it is essential for aviation

Just culture is the way how we deal with our own mistakes

This presentation contains the story of just culture at HungaroControl and the personal views of Mihaly Kurucz
